LOT 4 - Through Newfoundland with the Camera

Description

Through Newfoundland with the Camera

By R.E. Holloway (1905)

Through Newfoundland with the Camera by R.E. Holloway, published in 1905, is a captivating photographic travelogue that offers readers a visual journey through the stunning landscapes of Newfoundland at the turn of the 20th century. Holloway, an accomplished photographer, presents a collection of striking images that capture the island's natural beauty, its rugged coastlines, towering cliffs, picturesque fishing villages, and the everyday lives of its inhabitants.

Accompanied by insightful descriptions and commentary, the book provides a unique perspective on Newfoundland's geography, people, and culture during a time of significant change. The photographs not only document the environment but also highlight the province's development and the challenges faced by its communities. As one of the earliest photographic works dedicated to Newfoundland, Through Newfoundland with the Camera remains an invaluable historical and visual record, offering a rare glimpse into the island's landscapes and way of life in the early 20th century. This book is a must-have for collectors of Newfoundland history, photography enthusiasts, and those interested in the island's cultural heritage.
